TEXT

THE SECRET TO HAPPINESS

Following a talk on mental health, the famous psychiatrist Dr. Martha Harris was asked, 'What would you tell a person to do if they felt their mental health deteriorating?' Most people thought she would say, 'Consult a psychiatrist'. But she surprised everyone when she replied, 'Leave your house, find someone in need and do something to help that person'. This is the secret to happiness and mental well-being: not repeating mantras telling yourself that you're great, but going out and doing great things for others.

Stephen Cole is one of the world's leading experts in the emerging field of 'give and you shall receive' research. In his research he discovered that, when given the chance to help others, two thirds of the people he studied felt a positive physical sensation, and around half said they actually felt emotionally 'high'. Others felt stronger and more energetic, warmer or calmer. For a lucky 13% of people, the act of helping others even reduced their own physical aches and pains.

Particularly generous acts of goodness, like volunteering your time, make us happier and can even reduce depression. But this isn't just a 'perceived' benefit. It has been proved that the well-being you experience from doing good affects your brain chemistry. When you act to help others, your brain produces its own healthy version of heroin, called endorphins. Of course, this means there may be an element of selfishness in helping others, but there's nothing wrong with that.
